The NCADD Medical-Scientific Committee is made up of physicians, psychologists and others to provide advice and guidance to the NCADD Board of Directors, staff and National Network of Affiliates on activities related to medicine, health and addiction to alcohol and drugs. The Committee develops NCADD position papers, advisories, and other public statements for approval by the Board which reflect the latest medical and scientific understanding of the disease of alcoholism and drug dependence.

- Additionally the NCADD Medical-Scientific Committee:
- Identifies areas needing further research and encourages the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism (NIAAA), National Institute on Drug Addiction (NIDA) and other organizations like the Research Society on Alcoholism (RSA) to undertake such research.
- Develops general information pamphlets to inform the public about relevant issues regarding alcoholism and drug dependence.
